A year before the action of the Opera begins, occurs the anniversary of the "Pardon," or annual fête of Ploërmel (a village in Brittany), when all the inhabitants go in procession to the chapel, to pay homage to the Virgin. On this day a marriage is to take place between HOEL, a goatherd, and DINORAH. A tempest arises which lays the house and property of the bride's father in ruins. Hoel sees nothing but poverty for him and his intended, and lends an ear to an ancient superstition of the hidden treasure from Tonick, an old Wizard, and departs in company with him to undergo the necessary probation. Tonick dies a short time before the expiration of the year, and leaves Hoel master of the secret, with the knowledge of the penalty that awaits the first who lays hands on the treasure. Hoel is determined to find a go-between, and accomplish his object with impunity. He returns to Ploërmel, and persuades Corentin, a vagrant musician, distinguished for cupidity and cowardice, to take part in the enterprise. being nearly completed, they set off to the appointed place. Dinorah, believing her lover has forsaken her, goes mad, and passes her time roving about the country accompanied by a pet goat. While Hoel is endeavouring to induce Corentin to perform his part in their compact, she appears in the "val maudit," and sings a few snatches of the legend, indicating that the first who touches the treasure shall die within the year. Corentin is apprised of his danger. An altercation between Hoel and his intended victim ensues, during which Dinorah appears among the rocks. Corentin suggests "the mad lady" as his substitute. Hoel, though he sees Dinorah, thinks her but a phantom sent to lure him to destruction, and consents; when suddenly a thunder-storm explodes. The goat traverses the bridge over the chasm; the sluices underneath burst; and the waters of the torrent precipitate themselves tumultuously into the Dinorah rushes towards the bridge, which gives way beneath her, and she tumbles into the abyss. She has dropt a necklace previous to her fall. Hoel picks it up and recognises Forgetful of everything, he flies to the rescue of his beloved. The anniversary of the "Pardon" has again come round, and the inhabitants of Ploërmel are again preparing for its celebration. Hoel has succeeded in rescuing Dinorah from destruction. Struck with one familiar object after another, the young maiden regains her faculties, awakening slowly, as if from a dream, and ultimately recognises her lover. The happy couple accompany the procession of the pilgrimage to the church, where their union is solemnised.

SCENA ED ARIA.

(Le ultime note del Coro si perdono nel lontano. Una capra bianca traversa la scena nel fondo e dispare saltellando. Dinorah accorre dietro le traccie di quella, si sofferma, ascolta, indi continua ad inseguirla. Essa è vestita elegantemente come le fidanzate della Brettagna.)
